Who Has Patriotism in His Soul and Money in His Pocket-book-The Wonders of the Great White City. A Guide to the Various Exhibits-A Letter of More than Ordinary In-

To the Editor of the Intelligencer.

Sin:-I have just returned from the World's Fair after two weeks stay. I found lodgings west of and near the fair grounds, and entered by the Sixty-second street entrance. Passing to the left was the long, stately agricultural building with its large dome. On both sides extended beautiful lawns with beds of flowers and rare plants. Within was the magnificent wine display and the long line of horticultural exhibits. The west side of this building is devoted to a display of fruits that no one should fail to see. The horticultural exhibit is one of the chief attractions of the fair.

one of the chief attractions of the lair.

Next in line, to the north, is the childrens building. Here the little ones are left duly ticketed for delivery to the proper parents when called for. Near by is one of the great features of the fair, the woman's building. Much time should be spent in this building; it is good to be there. Passing from the woman's building, still to the north, is the public comfort building. Its rooms and parlors are amply provided with and parlors are amply provided with seats and lounges for rest and lunch eating.
Passing between the large Illinois and Passing between the large lineous and California state buildings, still to the north and standing among the state buildings is that white palace, the art calleries. Its contents are the best contributions of art galleries, governments and artists of the world, in statuary and painting. It is a source of delight for the visitor for as many days as he can

The visitor is now among the state buildings. If he will take about two days and hastily visit each one he will be amply repaid and never regret it. If he will do so they can be found in proximity about as follows: Illinois, California, Indiana, Wisconsin, Colorado, Ohio, Michigan, Washington, South Dakota, Nebraska, North Dakota, Kansas, Arkansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Florida, Kentucky, West Virginia, Arizona, Oklahoma, New Mexico, New York, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, New Jersey, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Vermont, Maine, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Iowa, Virginia, Idaho, Utah and Texas.

If the visitor will now pass a short way to the northeastern grounds near the lake shore he will find in about this rotation the following ioreign, government buildings and discounts. The visitor is now among the state eign government buildings and dis-plays: France and the city of Paris, plays: France and the city of Paris, Coylon, Norway, Germany, Spain, Canada, Great Britain, New South Wales, Hayti, East Indies, Siam, Sweden, Columbia, Costa Rica, Guatemala, Venezuela, Turkey and Brazil. And out by the north pier he will find the battle ship, Illinois. These foreign government buildings are as worthy a visit; each and every one, as would be the countries they represent.

each and every one, as would be the countries they represent.

Entering another day by the Sixty-second street entrance, and turning to the right, is the transportation building. That is another of the great attractions of the fair. Passing eastward, close by it is the mines and mining building, and just beyond there is the electricity building. Language fails to portray the wonderful and beautiful things shown in these two last buildings. No such display has been made before, and the thought was, how has it all been got together and brought here? Directly in front, towards the lake Directly in front, towards the lake shore, looms up the wonder of the fair, the largest building in the world, the manufactures and liberal arts building. Its interior iron work construction should be seen by all men who do great should be seen by all men who do great work. The displays on the first and second floors are the richest, most splendid and costly things I have over seen. Their extent and abundance is be wildering. It would take years to see and examine it all. Next, northward is the United States government building, a large and beautiful structure, containing much of the great and wonderful things to be seen in Washington city. Still northward from the government building is the fisheries building. It is inclusive the fisheries bunding. have now to go back and take our stand at a central position on the fair ground, in front of the gem of all the buildings, the administration building. Promin-ent from any entrance is the admini-stration building, with the fountains and court of honor, the colossal status of Liberty, and the grand percetyle of columns and arches in front looking to the lake, with the manufacturers and electrical buildings on the left and the agricultural and machinery buildings on the right. This is the most impres-sive sight on the fair grounds, the like of which there has not been nor will there be again. A great scholar and traveller said "Rome or Greece in their ancient splendor had not its equal."

In the rear of the administration building is the central terminal station building, a botter and finer passenger station than elsewhere exists; but the railroads do not, with little exception, use it, but adhere to their various regu-lar depots, from whence the crowds of people make their way to hotels or fair people make their way to hotels or fair.

To the right of the administration building stands the machinery building of beautiful design and proportions, of immense length and amazing iron work construction. Inside it is one of the of the great buildings of the fair, and there all the mills, factories and shops of the universe seem to be represented.

Next, toward the lake is the agriculture building another great building and Next, toward the lake is the agricul-ture building, another great building of the fair. Nations and states in their separate and plainly marked divisions there exhibit in vast array and beauti-ful arrangement the products of all climes and countries, with such ma-chines and implements as are used in producing and gathering. Old Egyp-tian plows as used in the days of Mosos and, the Pharanas are there shown and the Pharoahs are there shown alongside of plows and harvesters of our time, glittering in gold and silver finish. Near the agricultural building is moored the Columbus caravels, exact counterparts of the vessels he sailed in on his memorable voyage.

Near by is the convent of La Ribida with the Columbus relies and papers, well worth a long pause and careful view. They will not be here again. I well worth a long pause and the view. They will not be here again. I saw here the original commission of Queen Isabella of Spain to Columbus to sail on that voyage of discovery that made known the continent we live on. Near the convent is the Krupp building and display of big guns, pieced armor plates and huge steel forgings, the wouder of modern warfare.

great industry. Near by, and in line is the forestry building. Its exhibits are of unexpected extent, completeness and beauty. West Virginia's timber exhibit shows well, and is complete. West Virginians should see it to know how rich we are at home. Passing on from the forestry building close by is the anthropological, or in other words, the anthropological, or in other words, the anthropological of the containing vast collections appertaining to the habits, customs and descent'of the various races of mankind, prehistoric and modern, an unrivaled study for the scientist and learned. Close by is the dairy building, containing all that this great industry knows and has to show. Our dairymen and butter and cheese makers should mark this well.

In the rear of the dairy building much space is covered by the stock pavilious and display. much space is covered by the stock pa-vilions and display. Here a lively con-test is going on, open to all the world. And thus stand the chief features of the fair, in the order and rotation named. The round as described may be named. The round as described may be taken up at any point.

Much time is lost and fatigue caused by wandering aimlessly about. The fair grounds front easterly on the lake, westwardly to the vast field of hotels, lodging houses and restaurants that occupy the prairies of this new suburb of Chicago, and from Chicago to the fair grounds, five or six miles, is a succession of such places of entertainment. I noted ten or twelve entrances from the west side, and there were entrances from the north side and from twe south side, while the lake front was open to side, while the lake front was open to the boats from Chicago. My strongest impression was the architectural grand-eur of buildings separately and col-lectively, a sight unrivalled. I stood in awe before the grand entrances pillared and arched and decorated by groups of emblamatic statuary and figures of re-lief, a style of architecture beyond the dream of poets or the imagination of the beholder. Wheeling, Oct. 3. Not in Want of Birdseed.

New York Tribune.

He was a thin old man with chin whiskers and a potluck mouth. He sat beside an elderly woman with a bird cage on her lap, and as the car joited and wobbled down the narrow cross-street, the thin old man regarded the neighbor with increasing suspicion.

"Madame," he said, finally, "your cage is leaking."

"Sir?"
"I say your cage is leaking."
"It can't be," she snapped.
"Mebbe, it can't be," he rejoined,
"but I'm going to put my umbreila between us, if you don't stop the drip-

She hastily reversed the cage, so as to bring the dripping end upon a victim on the otherside side of her, and looked railroad spikes at the old man, but she didn't say anything.

The situation, however, was not improved by the change. Every jolt of the car brought a shower of bird-seed pattering into the old man's lap, and after the third fire he began to grow angry. "What do you take me for, anyhow?

he asked irritably, as he brushed the birdseed off his trousers, and dredged birdseed off his trousers, and dredged up another supply from his overcoat pocket. "Take me for a woodpecker? Think I'm a bullfinch with red wings a green tailfeather?"

"What do you mean?" asked the owner of the cage indignantly.

"Mean!" ejaculated the old man, now white with heat, "I mean I won't stand it. I'll take the next car. You have no right to drip water and birdseed all over a public conveyance." seed all over a public conveyance."
And he started for the car door.
"Go right along, old man," called the owner of the cage. 'Madame!' "Oh, don't wait to sass back," she went on shrilly. "Woodpecker, are yer-bullfinch with red wings, hey? If my two canaries clapped syes on you, with your bald head and rummy red nose, they'd take you fer a bottle fly! Reckon I kin keep my end up, even if I am a lone woman with a birdcage. What do you think, old man?'

He didn't think. He stood on the curbstone, fully a block away aiready, and even at that distance the conductor could see the birdseed glistening on his overcont.
